Sports Intelligence Project

- Context

The “Sports Intelligence” research project is a joint action between the Federal University of Paraná (UFPR) and the National High Performance Sport Department (SNEAR) of the Ministry of Sport.

This project began 7 years ago with the aim of producing, analyzing, and disseminating information about sport in Brazil, and to analyze the respective public policies.

Programs

- The “Second Half” (Segundo Tempo) is a grassroots program was designed in 2003, with aim to democratizing access to the practice of sports in the country. The idea behind this initiative was to promote the full development of children, adolescents, and young people in socially vulnerable areas, thus enhancing quality of life and citizenship. Since then, the Ministry of Sport has strived to integrate its educational sport policy with the current national educational policy, aiming to encourage the practice of sports in schools.

Programs

- The Sports and Leisure Program of the City (PELC) is developed in urban, rural, traditional and indigenous peoples communities. Examples of spaces for the activities are: squares, courts, parish halls, sports gyms, soccer fields, and social clubs. In these spaces, with a participative and democratic management principle, sports and leisure activities, as well as cultural and artistic manifestations, are practiced, democratizing the access to recreational and leisure sports to the community.
